A Poetry by Sri Joydip on Environmental Sustainability

Thousands of Greenfield, was in my brain, when I came to you.

Those lakes are without water, those trees are without life, just the field exists still in my brain.

I have bought a flat on the icon in topmost floor, with whatever you have given for my hard work for years.

The sky is very near, only I miss the smell of mud.

Only the finished lakes, dead trees are no longer in my head, those I can see wherever I look from my flat.

You have given me a compensation for hard work, but I have not got any com-ensation for staying alone in a dead man's land with cyclones happening now and then.

Who is going to give that ?

'Treasure' - A Short Story by Biswajit Roy (Part - I)

Ratan belonged to a rural background. Actually he still does. It's different thing that such belonging of his could no longer be associated in present tense with him so far his present urban mould is concerned. Yes, he's now far in, not from, the madding crowd of the cities. The fact that he considers it madding, is why he happens to give it a go, when he gets a call to attend an important matter, at his homeland, Palashgram. His grandfather's elder brother, is going to settle down all land and property issues, of which Ratan too is a parcener.

He takes Manoj, a friend of his, with him.

Life influences create great things (Part I)

A short story authored jointly by Alan Tupicoff and Siamndoyo (Sam)

Humanity has always existed in "herds" for many reasons including security and growth / development. We gain from being in groups but can often also exist as solitary individuals floating through our existence, even within a group "herd". Some people are loners and seek to stay "out of the spotlight. In both scenarios,

"Humanity has always existed in Herds"

we can become familiar with our lives and accept mediocrity. We assign aspirations to our dreams, our "someday / one day" space.
