

Community Football Match
Of
Participatory Human Rights Advancement Society

PHRAS Volunteers Football Match

To achieve our goal of bringing about peace and inspire a culture of greater understanding throughout communities, we're engaging with community leaders. Young Ambassador Training is a local community initiative that uses football to connect young people from different faiths, cultures and backgrounds and get them to communicate, play together and learn to confront stereotypes and better understand one another.

Develop and activate 'Peace Matches' and 'Community Tournaments' in order to raise awareness of issues that exist in communities. Bring together different people, communities into one team, creating a unified team to play against our footballers for peace team.

Participatory Human Rights Advancement Society has always tried to arrange this type of matches. Together we can make a brighter and enlighten society.
