

UNITED NATIONS GLOBAL COMPACT

COMMUNICATION ON ENGAGEMENT

Part III - Measurement of Outcomes

Inter Campus is a model that provides coaches, social workers, educators, and other helping professionals with resilience-focused practical tools for developing and planning psychosocial interventions through football with children who have been victims of violence and other traumatic experiences, protecting vulnerable children against risk and promote positive development by flexibly delivering content that builds children's well-being (physical, mental and social)

Inter Campus is committed toward a sustainable future, with particular attention to Children Rights and wellbeing. Measurement is part of a self-evaluation, cyclical process that aspires to a steady improvement and transparency, in the supreme interest of the Child.

While internal auditing on Human Rights is at embryonic phase, external evaluation of the activity is a pillar of Inter Campus vision. Outputs are monitored and reported since the very beginning of the project and outcomes have been yet involved into a social impact analysis recently started. A higher detail level has been achieved through:

- the scientific support of personality development protocols according children vulnerabilities and resources;
- international and standard parameters, focusing on life-skills and resilience;
- ad hoc and third party run researches.

Multi-stakeholder dialogue is still the key for enhancing and innovating; however, cultural and social needs of populations under stress are one of the main objectives of our analysis; it is crucial to consider local cultural and social processes when designing prevention tools and mental health services in humanitarian settings.
